The new, natural way to tan

"A faux tan is a safe and easy way to make you look healthier and boost your complexion."

The new faux glow to try is 100 percent organic.

I've always liked the idea of a salon spray tan, but the chemicals and that horrible odor kept me from making it a habit. Now, more salons are offering natural and organic versions of fake tans. They cost the same ($60 to $75), but they're free of the alcohol, oils, dyes, perfumes, and other chemicals used in traditional spray tans.

I went to the Smooth Synergy Cosmedical Spa in New York to try an organic tan. I put on a pair of disposable underwear. Then my esthetician, Kyung, sprayed my entire body. After 10 minutes, my body looked naturally and evenly tanned—and it took just 5 minutes to dry.

Bottom line: Thumbs up. There was no odor, no stickiness, and no uneasy feeling about spraying my body with chemicals. See Health.com/looks for organic-tanning locations near you.
